Clean Well Lighted Sentences A

An excellent example of Hemingway's style is found in "A Clean, Well-Lighted Place." In this story, there is no maudlin sentimentality; the plot is simple, yet highly complex and difficult. Focusing on an old man and two waiters, Hemingway says as little as possible. He lets the characters speak, and, from them, we discover the inner loneliness ...

Hemingway's Writing Style

Stylistically, passive voice can be used as well. The passive voice can add style when: the writer wants the "punch" to be at the end of a sentence; the agent is unknown or unimportant (i.e. The person doing the action is unknown.); the writer wants to hide the agent's identity; Many will say that the passive voice is not permitted in ...
