Lost in Me (Here and Now #1) Prologue. September—Eleven Months Before Accident. WHEN MAXIMILIAN Hollowell winks at me, my heart somersaults like an overzealous toddler at her first gymnastics class. Because, yes, when it comes to this guy, I am so over-the-top awkward that even the metaphorical tumbling of my internal organs is cringe-worthy.

"A core part of her identity was taking care of him," my 24-year-old cousin Sarah Nguyentran, and their eldest granddaughter, told me. "Most of her life gravitated around him and going to temple." "I can't even imagine what she's doing now with the pandemic. As a person in that generation, it's so hard to adapt," she added.
